

Employability – Skills for the Future

With Robert Plant (Pearson ELT)

With job markets changing, what are the skills that will ensure a place in tomorrow's job market? How do we know how to prepare our students for the changing scenes of the world of work? While English remains to be a key skill well into the future, more is needed to secure employment.

In our session we will look at research into the skills needed for jobs in the near future, go into its key findings, explore how these may be integrated into what we teach and also look at a few examples of how Pearson's Business Partner series approaches this topic.

All participants will receive a voucher for a free copy of the level of their choice of the Business Partner student eBook and instructor access to the accompanying learning platform MyEnglishLab Business Partner.

Robert Plant is not a singer. However, he has tried. Many times. It is not part of his skill set. What he is, is a business English trainer with experience in diverse fields. Originally from Australia, he now resides in Munich where, as a member of MELTA, he has given a range of workshops in the fields of business English and ESP. He works part time for Pearson and part time as a teacher at the Fremdspracheninstitut Munich and is also a cricket tragic.
